I am a resident of Indiana and object to having a Federal mandate gutting our do not call law. I am very happy to report very few calls after being registered in Indiana. As I understand your proposal, anyone who claims I am an "existing customer" could call me. As it now stands, if I am on Indiana's do not call list, I may not be called unless there is an item of collection pending, or there is a pending business transaction. This means no calls for solicitation of any kind.

Instead of negating laws of states which currently exist, why not supplement and let the consumer decide which avenue to pursue. This would be kind of like deciding whether to file Federal or State charges when the snipers were caught, or when Timothy McVey was charged.

Please, leave indiana's law in tact.
